

Why School Choice doesn't work.

The choice of schools won't help unless the system is changed. The results are that it usually lowers the quality of the good school without helping the poor school. The exception is when good students move from a poor school to a better school. Even the best schools seldom have a program that allows a student achieve anywhere near their potential. While teacher unions certainly don't help it is the system that is the real problem. The current education system and regulations guarantee the failure of a large percent of students and handicap the gifted. I've spent sixty years working on this problem and so I will have to pass the task to you and others. My last act is that I've decided to write a short book that explains the problems and their solution.
