

Is violence an innate element of human behavior?

The following study might help you understand the violence occurring in this country and throughout the world.

Researchers recently unearthed the 10,000-year-old remains of 27 people near Lake Turkana in northern Kenya and this brutal scene is a controversial find—it may be the oldest evidence of warfare between humans. These findings show compelling evidence that these victims, including Studies by the researchers from the University of Cambridge show compelling evidence that the victims, including children under the age of six, were killed in a single event. Many of the skeletons were found face down; others were found in a position that suggests they were bound, including a woman in the late stages of pregnancy. Researchers, also, recovered the bones of the nine-month-old fetus.

The study fuels the idea that human warfare is as old as we are. Fortunately man has been able to control his violent nature to a limited degree or civilization probably wouldn't exist. However the veneer of civilization is thin.